

Abbreviated Curriculum Vitae
ALAN E. STEWART, Ph. D.

Name: Alan E. Stewart

Present Rank: Associate professor (April 26, 2004) - Tenured

Proportion Time Assigned: .45 Instruction, .30 Research

Academic Degrees:

Ph. D.	Counseling Psychology, The University of Georgia,	1994
M. A.	Community/Clinical Psychology, University of North Carolina at Charlotte	1988
B. A.	Psychology, University of North Carolina at Charlotte	1985
	Undergraduate Certificate – Atmospheric Science, University of Georgia, Department of Geography	2009

Selected Refereed Journal-Based Projects

- Stewart, A. E., Roecklein, K. A., Tanner, S., & Kimlin, M. G. (2014). Possible contributions of skin pigmentation and vitamin D in a polyfactorial model of seasonal affective disorder. Medical Hypotheses.
- Stewart, A. E. (2014). Edwin Grant Dexter: An early research in human behavioral biometeorology. International Journal of Biometeorology.
- Stewart, A. E., Lazo, J. Morss, R. & Demuth, J. (2012). The relationship of weather salience with the perceptions, uses, and values of weather information in a nationwide sample of the United States. Weather, Climate, & Society, 4, 172-179.
- Stewart, A. E. (2011). Gulf Coast residents underestimate hurricane destructive potential. Weather, Climate, and Society, 3, 116-127.
- Stewart, A. E. (2010). Minding weather and climate: The measurement of weather salience. Bulletin of the American Meteorological Society, 90, 1833-1841.
- Stewart, A. E. (2007). The use of weather as a safeguarding strategy. Journal of Individual Psychology, 63, 345-352.
- Stewart, A. E. (2007). Linguistic dimensions of weather and climate perception. International Journal of Biometeorology, 51, 57-67.

Stewart, A. E. (2007). Individual and environmental psychology. Journal of Individual Psychology, 63, 67-85.

Selected Presentations

Stewart, A. E. & Capielo, C. (2014). Sources, perceptions, and needs for weather information by Spanish-speaking residents in Georgia. 94th American Meteorological Society Annual Meeting. American Meteorological Society, Atlanta, Georgia, February 2014.

Stewart, A. E., Knox, J. A., & Qureshi, A. (2014). Student and Parent Outcomes of an Initiative to Infuse Weather Science and Safety Instruction in the Georgia K-8 Curriculum. 94th American Meteorological Society Annual Meeting. American Meteorological Society, Atlanta, Georgia, February 2014.

Fatemi, A. & Stewart, A. E. (2013). The relationship of color with emotion variables in images of nature. Poster presented at the 25th Annual Meeting of the Association for Psychological Science. Washington, DC. May 2013.

Stewart, A. E., & Hunter, K. M. (2013). A scale for the assessment of weather-related risk-taking. Poster presented at the 25th Annual Meeting of the Association for Psychological Science. Washington, DC. May 2013.

Stewart, A. E., & Fatemi, A. E. (2013). An investigation of emotional responses to weather-related pictures. Poster presented at the 25th Annual Meeting of the Association for Psychological Science. Washington, DC. May 2013.

Grants Received

Stewart, A. E. (2012). Sources, Perceptions, and Uses of Weather Information by Spanish-Speakers in Georgia: A Needs Assessment. University of Georgia Provost Summer Research Grant ($5000).

Stewart, A. E., & Knox, J. (2010). Teaching Science Teachers about Masters of Disaster in Socioeconomically and Climatologically Vulnerable Counties of Georgia. National Science Foundation Grant No. 1034853 for $149,000 (2 years).

Stewart, A. E. (2008). Teaching Science Teachers about Masters of Disaster. University of Georgia, College of Education, Teacher Quality Grant. (approximately $90,000 for 3 years – 2008, 2009, 2010).s

Stewart, A. E. (2008). Natural Hazards Research Center, University of Colorado at Boulder, Quick Response Grant. Comparison of a Nonlinear Hurricane Intensity Scale with the Saffir-Simpson Hurricane Scale. ($5000).

Recognitions and Achievements

President, Division 34 – Population and Environmental Psychology – American Psychological Association 2009-2010.

John J. P. Dussich Award for Research in Victimology – American Society of Victimology 2007.

Professional Memberships

American Meteorological Society
Association for Psychological Science
Association of American Geographers
International Society of Biometeorology